Pastoral & Social Ethics

I. Course Description (3 credits)

This course will examine the biblical and theological material that constitutes the foundational elements of ethical and moral reflection. To understand Christian ethics requires attention to its sources, norms, authorities and forms of practical reasoning. The course is divided into three sections: the first is a general consideration of ethics from an historical perspective with particular attention to the theological virtues; the second examines the law from a distinctly reformed perspective as a framework for the Christian life; and the third section looks with a more specific focus at a series of concrete ethical matters.

II. Course Objectives

- a. To acquaint students with the sources, questions, conversations, challenges and tasks of Christian ethics.
- b. To introduce students to a deep reflection about the moral life that is shaped and formed by theological convictions rooted in and governed by Holy Scripture.
- c. To help students cultivate the biblical and theological skills and virtues necessary to engage in ethical issues and disputes.

III. Course Requirements

- a. Required Reading: Students must complete all required reading by the last day of class. As a theological student, good reading and the virtues that attend reading well are essential to pastoral ministry and the Christian life. Learning key texts and the ability to engage them charitably and fairly is an exercise central to good theology. Students will submit a report of how much reading has been completed.
Due: Friday, May 8th, 5:00PM

- b. Reflection Paper: Students are expected to write a 3-page reflection paper that looks at the ‘Third Use of the Law’ as it is defined and put to use in Reformed Theology. The aim of this short paper is for students to be able to grasp the theological importance of this significant feature of the Reformed tradition and to articulate its significance for Christian discipleship. Due: Friday, May 8th, 5:00PM
- i. Students should consult the following readings to help write this paper that are available on canvas: Ferguson and Hesselink
- c. Book Review: Students are expected to write a 3-page book review of one of the works listed below. The aim is to understand the theological and pastoral significance of the issue dealt with in the book, engaging the author with fairness and charity, while analyzing the argument clearly and competently. The aim is to grapple with the issue and whether one agrees or disagrees with the main thesis, the review should demonstrate a solid biblical and theological engagement to help the student speak to believer and unbeliever on the topic. The structure of the review should include a description of the argument and the work, and a critical engagement. Due: Friday, May 8th, 5:00PM
